

ADIRONDACK FORUM ON INVASIVE SPECIES
Opportunities for Communities, Lands, and Waters
Joan Weill Library, Paul Smith's College, August 10 -11, 2010

Hosted by the Adirondack Partnership for Regional Invasive Species Management at Paul Smith's College, Paul Smiths, NY

Invasive species are a top threat to our lands and waters, to our favorite outdoor pastimes and cherished traditions, and to forestry, fisheries, and agriculture upon which local economies rely. Some species, like purple loosestrife, have been in New York for hundreds of years, but, others, like emerald ash borer, only recently have arrived. The explosion in the expansion of species and the rate of new arrivals is alarming and cause for concern.

The Forum's themes center on the need to consider all types of invasive species - plants and animals, aquatic and terrestrial - and on ways in which communities can be prepared to address them. The purpose of the forum is to

- highlight initiatives underway in the region,
- showcase local stories of successes and challenges told by community members,
- feature up-to-date information about new invasive species, and
- identify important next steps that we must collectively take to have a real and lasting impact on this challenging environmental and economic issue.

Join resource managers, elected officials, members of governmental and nongovernmental organizations, community groups, and private citizens from across the region to listen, learn, discuss, and take action.

*Forum organizers include representatives from the Adirondack Park Invasive Plant Program
(the Adirondack Partnership for Regional Invasive Species Management),
Lake George Association, Warren County Cornell Cooperative Extension,
Lake Champlain Basin Program, Hamilton County Soil and Water Conservation District, Adirondack Park Agency, and the Adirondack Watershed Institute of Paul Smith's College.*
